

The Baseball League Experiment

January 6, 2026

version 0.01

I'm launching a fantasy baseball service for the 2026 season with:

1. Phillies players only.
2. A live auction for players.
3. Scores tallied weekly.

Those core features are unlikely to change.

Everything else is experimental.

I am absolutely open to ideas and questions.

Please send ideas and questions.

These are the current league rules:

Participation is free.

There is no prize money.

There are 8 team franchises in the league.

Each team has 4 roster spots.

Pitchers compete based on Innings Pitched.

That's it. Outs are all that matter.

Hitters compete based on Total Bases + Walks + HBP (Offense).

It doesn't matter how you get on base.

Scoring

Every week, points are awarded to teams as follows:

Team with most Innings Pitched that week gets 10 points

Team with next most Innings Pitched that week gets 8 points

Team with next most Innings Pitched that week gets 4 points

Team with most Offense that week gets 10 points

Team with next most Offense that week gets 8 points

Team with next most Offense that week gets 4 points

Partial weeks at the beginning of the year, the all-star break, and the end of the year all get the same points awarded as full weeks.

If a pitcher hits and gets on base, that counts.

If a hitter pitches and get outs, those count.

Ties

Ties split the points, so if there's a tie between first and second, both teams get 9.

If there's a 3-way tie for second, everyone in the tie gets 4 points and nobody gets anything for third.

If there's a 3-way tie for third, everyone gets 1.3 points.

Rosters

Only players on the Phillies roster can be on teams in our league.

If a player on your team gets traded away from the Phillies, you have an empty roster spot to fill.

You do not have to fill roster spots immediately, or ever.

Phillies players at any level of the majors and minors are eligible to be on teams, but only major league production counts.

If you have a player that gets sent down or called up, you don't have to do anything.

If you want all pitchers, all hitters, or any mix of hitters and pitchers, that's fine.

It's entirely up to you.

With 8 teams of 4 players each in our league, a maximum of 32 players can be on our combined rosters, but there are only 26 spots on the major league team, so some teams in our league will only have 3 productive players at a time. That's important to keep in mind when you plan your auction strategy. $1 at the end of the auction might get you a major league player.

Roster moves

You can make a maximum of 1 roster move attempt per day.

Even if you have more than one open roster spot, you only get one roster move attempt per day.

Roster moves happen at midnight eastern time.

Your roster move attempt includes the name of the player you want to drop and the name of the player you want to add.

You can't submit a roster move for a player on another team in our league in the hope that the player gets dropped that day before your turn in the roster move process.

Roster move attempts are processed in reverse order of the current league standings. In the case of ties in the league standings, roster move attempts will happen between the tied franchises randomly.

If the player you attempt to add isn't available when it comes to your turn in the roster moves process, nothing happens. You don't lose the player you tried to drop. You can try again tomorrow.

When the Phillies add a player, they become available at the end of day they are acquired.

That night's roster move process will put them on the lowest-ranking team that requests them.

What happens if there's a tie in the standings and two teams try to acquire the same player? TBD.

There's no trading players between teams.

The auction

This will be a Zoom call at 6:00 PM on Sunday, March 22, 2026.

Spring training will be wrapping up, but we should have a pretty good idea of who's who by then.

If you want to run a franchise, but can't attend the auction, let me know and I'll work on a way to make that happen.

Every team gets $100 to field their team.

Players will come up for auction in some order that I work out ahead of time with the most valuable players generally coming first.

I'll publish the auction order ahead of time in case people want to try to plan. I'll be the auctioneer, plus I'll be bidding on players for my own team, and I'll be handling bids for people who can't make the call. Should be interesting. At the end of each player auction, we will know which team in our league that player is on and how much the owner paid for them.

If you run out of money before you fill your roster, that's fine. You can fill your roster out one player at a time later with roster moves.

If you have extra money left over at the end of the auction, that's also fine, it wasn't really money anyway.

At a maximum, we need to have 32 auctions. The first few will take a couple of minutes, then things should speed up.

If an auction starts with two owners simultaneously bidding $100 for a player, the older owner gets the player.

Otherwise, it's an open auction, so owners just shout out how much they're willing to pay and that's the going price.

Ownership of players is for the 2026 season only.

Implementation

How is this going to happen? TBD.

One purpose of this league is to serve as a programming and web development challenge for me.

My goal is to have an easy-to-use website that shows our standings, rosters, stats, and handles everything from roster moves to smack talk.

I'll build that as we go, so keep a flexible mindset.

If I have to start with shared text files and email, I will.

We might try a few different approaches before we find something that works, so keeping the rules simple is a key feature. If something doesn't work for you, or you think it could be better, please, I'm begging you, let me know.

I need feedback.

For example, we need a name for the league.